Three distinct antigen receptors were defined on normal human B-cell precursors in short-term culture: (1) a surface immunoglobulin (Ig) detected by monoclonal antibody W23; (2) an antigen receptor composed of a C3b/C3d receptor, detected by monoclonal antibody 3G8; and (3) an Ig-free antigen receptor, detected by monoclonal antibody 3G6. Surface Ig was initially present only on precursor B cells which also expressed C3b/C3d receptor and/or Ig-free antigen receptor. After longer culture, the majority of cells no longer expressed C3b/C3d receptor but still expressed either surface Ig or the Ig-free antigen receptor. After Ig gene rearrangement, but before Ig synthesis, C3b/C3d receptor expression was lost. The temporal relationship between antigen receptor expression on B cells in the circulation and on their 82157476af
