When you log on to the internet the most important thing you can do is to make sure you're not being hijacked by a hacker who is trying to use your computer as a storage space for things you shouldn't be seeing. It's a daunting prospect but it is possible to protect yourself and safeguard your data so that people trying to hack into your system are defeated. Here's how. 1. Block hacked websites One of the best ways of stopping hackers from taking over your computer is to stop their access to you. The most common hack involves people using your computer to send out unsolicited emails. Hacked websites are usually using code from viruses that have been sent to people from websites that have already been hacked. If you want to keep your computer safe, turn on Safe-Mode with Networking (Windows 7) or Safe Mode with Command Prompt (Windows 8) to get control over your computer. Once you've managed to get control, make sure you don't go back to your normal settings and allow websites that are not safe. Be more careful about websites that are asking for access to your computer than those that seem normal or safe. If a website is asking for access, the chances are they have been hacked.

2. Block computer viruses

Most people know there are plenty of viruses out there but because they don't always do anything harmful, people don't think too much about them. The best way to protect yourself is to scan everything and keep your antivirus program up to date. New viruses come around all the time and one day, it's possible that a new one will be the cause of something really nasty. So to give yourself the best chance, download an antivirus program and set it up. If you find something you don't like, go to your control panel, click on Performance and Maintenance and then click on Administrative Tools and then run a scan. It's best to run it at least twice a week.
